The Deseret News of Salt Lake City reports Jason West went to a clinic in Vernal, Utah, on May 27 to dispute an outstanding $25 bill. The incident upset staff because pennies were strewn about the counter and floor, and West's action served "no legitimate purpose." (AP)

White House: War Strategy Set

Obama to announce 'real drawdown' of troops in Afghanistan

Washington

President Obama will order a "real drawdown" of U.S. forces from Afghanistan starting in July, the White House insisted Monday, a milestone in a long war that is testing the patience of the American people and Congress particularly after the killing of al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden.

Roughly 100,000 U.S. troops are in Afghanistan, three times as many as when Obama took office, and U.S. forces are expected to remain there through 2014.

Sometime this month, Obama is likely to announce how many troops will start coming home. The commander in chief is on record as promising a "significant" with-

U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates speaks to troops Monday in Afghanistan.

Range of Options for U.S.

President Obama's decision could be at least a couple weeks away. He is awaiting recommendations from Gen. David Petraeus, the top U.S. and NATO commander in Afghanistan, who is expected to offer a range of options on how to begin the withdrawal and at what pace. "I intend to follow through on that commitment that I made to the American people," Obama said Monday in an interview with Hearst Television. (AP) drawal of forces in July after having sent in an additional 30,000 troops in December 2009 to turn around a troubled war that began after the Sept 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Outgoing Defense Secretary Robert Gates said over the weekend that only a "modest" drawdown would be appropriate.

The White House sought to tamp down anticipation of Obama's decision, suggesting there are no major policy decisions in debate and that the more important date is 2014, when NATO forces have pledged to turn over control of security to Afghan forces.

Presidential spokesman Jay Carney said Obama's war strategy is set and that the coming drawdown is "a step along the way" to Afghanistan taking control of its own country. What's clear is that Obama is intent on avoiding what would widely be considered a token withdrawal. "It will be a real drawdown," Carney said, based on current conditions.

The president is likely to address the nation once he makes his decision, although no format or timing has been set. BEN FELLER (AP)

Santorum 'Ready' for '12

Former Pa. senator announces intention to run for president

Somerset, Pa.

Former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum, a blunt talker who is popular among social conservatives, plunged into the 2012 Republican presidential sweepstakes Monday, saying he wants to protect American freedoms under threat from President Obama.

Once the No. 3 Republican in the ranks of the Senate GOP leadership, Santorum charged that Obama has worked to undermine Americans' liberties and has imposed a national health care plan that saps individual choice. He accused Obama of spending billions of dollars that will add to the debt of future generations and said the president lacks faith in the nation's potential.

"I'm ready to lead. I'm ready to do what has to be done for the next generation, with the courage to fight for freedom, with the courage to fight for America," Santorum said,

Rick Santorum answers questions Monday in Somerset, Pa., after announcing his '12 bid.

Backstory

Rick Santorum had been laying the groundwork for a presidential bid when he lost a bruising re-election bid to the Senate in 2006. His opposition to abortion, gay marriage and embryonic stem cell research makes him an appealing candidate for conservatives. But his sometimes abrasive style alienated Pennsylvania voters, and they replaced him with Bob Casey, a Democrat. (AP) speaking from the sun-splashed steps of a county courthouse in western Pennsylvania. "That's why ... I'm running for president of the United States of America."

Santorum, who enjoys strong support from the anti-abortion rights bloc in the Republican Party, nodded to the social conservatives who have huge sway in early nominating states Iowa and South Carolina. He also pitched himself to tea party-style activists who have yet to jell around a candidate. (AP)

Hundreds March to Save W.Va. Mountain

HUNDREDS OF MARCHERS head out Monday on a five-day, 50-mile trek through West Virginia's southern coalfields to draw attention to mining threats to Blair Mountain. The mountain is the site of a 1921 armed uprising where between 7,500 and 10,000 coal miners marched for better working and living conditions.

Two bidders have already driven up the price of a private lunch with billionaire Warren Buffett to more than $1.5 million, and the online charity auction runs all week. Typically, the bidding doesn't reach astronomical prices until closer to the Friday evening end of the auction. That the bids jumped from the opening $25,000 to $1.51 million may bode well for the Glide Foundation; proceeds will help provide services to the poor and homeless in San Francisco. (AP)

Apple CEO Touts New iCloud Suite

Free digital content storage system allows access from anywhere

San Francisco

Apple founder Steve Jobs emerged briefly from medical leave on Monday to announce the company's latest venture — a music and video storage and delivery service that signals a dramatic shift in the technology industry and promises to upend the way users access information.

Called iCloud, the Apple service will allow users to request a spot on the company's servers to park their iTunes library and beam whatever is there to any device. The service will be free.

Speaking at the Worldwide Developers Conference in San Francisco, Jobs said that because of the proliferation of consumer tech gadgets, the system of storing music and video on one central device has "broken down."

"Keeping these devices in sync is driving us crazy," he said as the audience applauded. "We're going to demote the PC and Mac. ... We're going to move the digital hub, the center of your digital life, into the cloud."

While music and video are expected to be the big draw for iCloud, the service will also be able to store other data, such as documents and photos. But iCloud is more than just a "hard drive in the sky," Jobs said.

The information obtained or uploaded to one device will automatically sync with other devices. Users who take pictures with their iPhones, for example, will instantly be able to access the photos on their iPads. ELIZABETH FLOCK AND HAYLEY TSUKAYAMA (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Strauss-Kahn Pleads Not Guilty

New York

Dominique Strauss-Kahn formally asserted his innocence Monday to charges he tried to rape a hotel maid, but the drama unfolded outside the Manhattan courtroom as protesters jeered the former International Monetary Fund leader and lawyers for the housekeeper said she was eager to testify despite a "smear campaign" against her.

Strauss-Kahn

Strauss-Kahn's attorneys offered a rival account of the May 14 encounter at his $3,000-a-night Manhattan hotel suite, hinting again that the French diplomat might argue the encounter was consensual. By the end of the case, "it will be clear that there was no element of forcible compulsion," defense lawyer Ben Brafman said.

Strauss-Kahn, looking resolute, declared "not guilty" in a routine legal proceeding that lasted less than 10 minutes as his wife, journalist Anne Sinclair, watched.

Strauss-Kahn's next court date is set for July 18. (AP)

Torn Syria Speeds Toward Havoc

Government pledges a strong response after deadly assault

Beirut

Armed men attacked Syrian security forces in a tense northern city on Monday, Syrian officials said, and 120 policemen and security forces were killed in a region where the army has carried out days of deadly assaults on protesters calling for the end of President Bashar Assad's rule.

The government vowed to respond "decisively," setting the stage for a new crackdown against a popular uprising.

Communications were cut to the area around Jisr al-Shughour on Monday, and the details of the attack were impossible to verify.

Adnan Mahmoud, the chief government spokesman, said that Syrian forces had lost control of some areas for "intermittent periods of time" and promised that the army would restore security in the area.

"We will deal strongly and decisively, and according to the law,

Fragmented Protests

Mourners outside of Damascus, Syria, on Monday carry the coffin of a Palestinian protester who was killed Sunday when Israeli troops fired at demonstrators who tried to burst across Syria's border with the Israeli-controlled Golan Heights, killing as many as 23 people. Syrian President Bashar Assad's decision to allow pro-Palestinian protesters to storm the Israeli border twice in recent weeks indicates he may be trying to deflect focus from a serious crisis at home, and possibly divert international attention away from a violent new crackdown on a popular uprising. and we will not be silent about any armed attack that targets the security of the state and its citizens," said Interior Minister Ibrahim Shaar.

Jisr al-Shughour has been the latest focus of Syria's military, whose crackdown on the revolt has left more than 1,200 Syrians dead, activists say. Rights groups said at least 42 civilians have been killed there since Saturday.

Monday's state television report said the officers were ambushed as they responded to calls from residents for protection from the armed groups. It said 20 policemen were killed, and then the groups blew up a post office and attacked a security post, killing other forces.

The TV reports could not be independently confirmed. The Syrian government has severely restricted the media and expelled foreign reporters, making it nearly impossible to independently verify events. (AP)

With the wounded president out of Yemen, the U.S. and Saudi Arabia scrambled Monday to arrange a power transfer ensuring an end to his decades-long rule. But a top official said President Ali Abdullah Saleh, recovering in Saudi Arabia, would return home within days.

Workers on Monday heap cucumbers feared tainted with a "super-toxic" strain of E. coli for removal in Bucharest, Romania.

E. Coli's Source Elusive

Sprouts exonerated in deadly outbreak, German officials say

Berlin

In their second major retraction in a week, German officials said initial tests provided no evidence that vegetable sprouts were the cause of a deadly E. coli outbreak.

The surprise U-turn came only a day after the same state agency, Lower Saxony's agriculture ministry, announced that sprouts from an organic farm were suspected to be the cause of the outbreak. The ministry shut down the farm, recalled all its produce and urged Germans not to eat any sprouts.

On Monday, officials said 23 of 40 samples from the organic sprouts farm tested negative for the "super-toxic" strain of E. coli bacteria. Tests were still under way on 17 samples. And negative test results do not mean that previous sprout or seed batches weren't tainted.

Last week, German officials pointed to contaminated cucumbers from Spain as a possible cause, igniting vegetable bans and heated protests from Spanish farmers. But researchers concluded the Spanish cucumbers were contaminated with a different strain of E. coli.

"This investigation has been a disaster," Michael Osterholm, director of the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota, told The Associated Press.

The European Union's Health Commissioner defended German investigators, saying they were under extreme pressure as the crisis kept unfolding.

But the German flip-flop on the sprouts means there is still no confirmed source for the deadliest known E. coli outbreak, which has killed at least 22 people and sickened more than 2,330 across Europe. More than 630 people have suffered a rare, serious complication that can lead to kidney failure, and hospitals in northern Germany have been overwhelmed by the crisis. (AP) 42M The number of people worldwide who were forced to flee their homes due to natural disasters in 2010, more than double the number during the previous year, experts said Monday. The Internal Displacement Monitoring Center said the increase from 17 million displaced people in 2009 was mainly due to such "mega-disasters" as the massive flooding in China and Pakistan, and the strong earthquakes in Chile and Haiti. Are New Maps Worth $50K?

Q As "cool" as the new map might be, why don't they take the $50,000 and fix the Rosslyn escalator that is out of commission and has been at least since April? Or the Metro Center ones coming up from the Orange and Blue lines? With all the things desperately broken on the Metro system, it astounds me that THIS would be a funding priority.

There are plenty of things worth spending money on in the Metro system. But I've got to say, when I saw that Wyman was redesigning this widely used map for $50,000, my reaction was, "He works cheap."

Dr. Gridlock offers commuter counseling online at washingtonpost.com.

Q What's the solution here? Requesting riders to take their newspapers with them doesn't seem to work, and by 5 p.m. each day, the Metro is littered with abandoned papers. Why does everyone leave the mess for the Metro staff to clean up, when it takes only a second to grab the papers others have left behind and put them in recycling?

I think The Post pays for the bins. It doesn't help if people won't take their stuff with them when they leave the trains. Leftover newspapers are the most noticeable, but there's also the rolling soda bottles and food wrappers.

Q Do you think Capital Bikeshare, in some way, may put a negative strain on the transportation system? I've noticed many do not wear helmets and pads. They seem to be even more cavalier than most people on bikes as far as obeying the traffic laws.

I think Capital Bikeshare — or something like it — is here to stay and believe that's a good thing. I was pleased to see how much of the traffic on the 15th Street cycle track is made up of these rented bikes. I do wish they'd all wear helmets, though. I'm not sure — not denying it, just not sure — that Bikeshare riders or Zipcar drivers are any less skilled than the average street user. (I don't have a high opinion of the average street user's skills.) If a Bikeshare rider or a Zipcar driver does something dumb, it stands out and you tend to remember it. You may be seeing just as many dumb things done by other cyclists or drivers in rental cars not as clearly marked as the Zipcars are.

Q I understand the escalator repair at Foggy Bottom limits the station to one escalator in each direction, but why, oh, why do the station managers not stop the down escalator during morning rush hour so that people may walk up as well?

I think your point about the direction is correct. It's Metro policy that, under most circumstances, if there's just one escalator moving, it should be going up.

METRO PULSE

If D.C. police can't use breathalyzers to prove drivers are drunk, what should they use?

"I don't drink, so I don't know scientifically. But it seems that you should be able to just judge their driving."

D.C. Officer Held in Murder Case

Washington

The D.C. police officer charged with first-degree murder Friday in the death of a 20-year-old Temple Hills, Md., woman was ordered held without bond in a Monday hearing in Prince George's County District Court.

Richmond Phillips, who was charged with first- and second-degree murder in the death of Wynetta Wright, has also been charged with manslaughter in the death of Wright's daughter, Jaylin.

Police say Phillips, 39, killed Wright with a bullet to the head, then left her body in the park, drove her car up a hill and left the baby in it.

Jaylin's first birthday would have been Monday.

Phillips shot Wright on May 30, according to police, a day before he was due in court for a hearing that would begin to determine whether he was Jaylin's father.

The next hearing in the case is scheduled for July 1. RUBEN CASTANEDA (THE WASHINGTON POST)

District's AG accuses council member of misusing public funds

Washington

D.C. Council member Harry Thomas Jr. arranged to have more than $300,000 in public funds diverted to groups he controlled, and used the money as a lavish personal account, purchasing an Audi SUV and taking trips to Las Vegas and Pebble Beach, the city's attorney general said Monday.

In releasing a highly anticipated report, Attorney General Irvin B. Nathan alleges that Thomas' inappropriate "conversion" of the money for personal use was "willful, intentional and knowing." Nathan has filed a civil lawsuit aimed at forcing Thomas, D-Ward

5, to repay the money and intends to refer his findings to the U.S. attorney's office.

Meanwhile ...

Sulaimon Brown, a fired D.C. government employee who has alleged that he was promised a city job and was paid to bash then-Mayor Adrian M. Fenty on the campaign trail last year, testified before a D.C. Council committee Monday. The hearing was fiery, and Brown wore sunglasses during the proceedings. (EXPRESS)

The council member's behavior "clearly violates the civil laws," Nathan said Monday. "We are extremely disappointed in this violation of public service."

The allegations represent the culmination of a months-long probe that began with questions about charitable donations but has expanded into much wider concerns about misuse of city funds.

Thomas has been facing questions about his "Team Thomas" organization since his re-election campaign last November.

Republican opponent Timothy Day alleged that Thomas has used his nonprofit as a "slush fund" and raised questions about its undisclosed receipts and expenditures.

Day also pointed out that a nonprofit group Thomas operated was not registered for a federal tax exemption and that its registration with the District had lapsed.

"That's the furthest truth from what happened," Thomas said.

Weiner calls his online behavior 'regrettable,' but he won't resign

New York

After days of denials, a choked-up New York Democratic Rep. Anthony Weiner confessed Monday that he tweeted a photo of his bulging underpants to a woman and admitted to "inappropriate" exchanges with six women before and after getting married. He apologized for lying but said he would not resign.

Weiner said at a news conference that he had never met any of the women he corresponded with online and sometimes via telephone, and was not even sure of their ages. He also said he had never had sex outside of his marriage.

"This was me doing a dumb thing, and doing it repeatedly, and lying about it," he said.

Weiner, 46, married Hillary

Rodham Clinton aide Huma Abedin in July, with former president Bill Clinton officiating. Before that, Weiner had been known as one of New York's most eligible bachelors.

He said Monday he did not feel the scandal affected his work as a lawmaker but would understand if his constituents decided not to re-elect him.

"I'm going to work very hard to win back their trust," he said.

It was unclear how Weiner's admission of his online activities would affect his career. Shortly after his announcement, Rep. Nancy Pelosi, the minority leader of the House, called for an ethics committee investigation to determine whether Weiner had broken House rules.

Rep. Steve Israel, the House Democrats' campaign chief, said

Breitbart Speaks

Conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart, who runs Big-Government.com, took to the podium Monday before Rep. Anthony Weiner, defending his posts, which started the furor last week over the lewd photo sent from Weiner's Twitter account. The site also posted photos Monday said to be from a second woman who said she received shirtless shots of Weiner. (AP)

Weiner had "embarrassed himself, his family and the House."

Weiner, a 14-year veteran of Congress, gained a national profile last year by supporting a liberal provision of President Obama's health care reform bill. GOP opposition to that reform bill is one reason Obama and fellow Democrats could face tougher races during the 2012 election.

Weiner said that he had meant to send a direct message to the woman and "panicked" when he realized he had instead sent it out to all of his Twitter followers. He initially said that his account was hacked. But on Monday, Weiner called the photo a joke and a "hugely regrettable mistake."

Weiner began his career as a legislative assistant to then-Rep. Chuck Schumer, who is now the state's senior senator. He was elected to the New York City Council before winning Schumer's House seat in 1998. (AP/THE WASHINGTON POST)

Fate Unknown

Whether Rep. Anthony Weiner's political career will survive his Twitter photo flap remains to be seen. Here's a look at some of the sex scandals that have rocked other U.S. politicians. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

SURVIVED THE SCANDAL

Bill Clinton, impeached in the Monica Lewinsky matter but acquitted by the Senate.

Sen. David Vitter, identified as client of the "D.C. Madam" in '07 and re-elected in 2010.

CAREER-ENDERS

John Edwards, fathered child by a campaign aide, accused of a cover-up.

N.Y. Gov. Eliot Spitzer, resigned after he was caught hiring prostitutes.

Sen. John Ensign, resigned after an affair with an aide and a cover-up.

Rep. Chris Lee, resigned after shirtless-photo email flirtation.

Rep. Mark Foley, resigned over sexually suggestive emails to former pages.

Sen. Larry Craig, didn't seek re-election after arrest for soliciting sex in airport men's restroom.

Henry Cisneros, resigned as HUD secretary after lying about payments to his ex-mistress.

"To be clear, the picture is of me, and I sent it. ... I lied because I was ashamed at what I had done, and I didn't want to get caught."

Another Gold Rush for U.S.

Americans return to serious action with eyes on a Cup repeat

Soccer

The United States' men's soccer team has just wrapped up 10 months of exhibitions, training camps and planning for the future. Now the games really start to matter again.

The U.S. begins its quest for a Gold Cup championship Tuesday night when it takes on Canada.

After a 4-0 drubbing at the hands of world-champion Spain in a tune-up friendly on Saturday, the Americans, who trotted out a reserve-filled lineup against the Spaniards, have turned the page and are set to contend for the regional championship for the Confederation of North, Central American and Caribbean Association Football (CONCACAF).

This tournament is the first important competition for the United States since last summer's World Cup.

The United States won the 2007 Gold Cup and qualified for the 2009 Confederations Cup in South Africa. It was there that the Americans upset No. 1-ranked Spain to reach the final of a major FIFA competition for the first time, ultimately falling to Brazil, 3-2. The U.S. team used that tournament as a springboard for its run-up to the 2010 World Cup, and its players and coaches are placing a lot of emphasis on returning for the 2013 event.

The United States, which has won the Gold Cup four times, is joined by five-time champion Mexico, one-time champion Canada,

Local Angle RFK-Bound?

Should the United States finish first or second in its group, it would find itself at RFK Stadium for a quarterfinal match on June 19. The last time the Americans played in D.C., they tied Costa Rica in a World Cup qualifier. The U.S. is 12-3-4 all-time at RFK. A.C.

The 12 teams are split into three groups of four. Each team plays the other teams in its group once, and the top two teams in each group earn places in the quarterfinals. The top two third-place finishers also advance. From there, the eight remaining teams play a single-elimination knockout tournament to determine the winner.

For the U.S., this will be a chance to quickly wipe away any bad memories from its loss to Spain — the first time the U.S. had allowed three or more goals in the first half since a 4-1 loss to Denmark in 1997.

"It's a little kick up the backside," midfielder Clint Dempsey told The Associated Press. "Even though it was a friendly, you never want to lose a game, especially by four goals. AVI CREDITOR

5 Americans To Watch

While star midfielders Landon Donovan and Clint Dempsey and goalkeeper Tim Howard are expected to shoulder the load for the United States, here are five U.S. players to keep an eye on.

Jozy Altidore, F:

Though he has done his part for the United States by commanding attention and drawing fouls, Altidore, a physical player with immense talent, needs a productive Gold Cup to restore self-confidence and to instill faith in fans and his coaches, both state-side and abroad.

Michael Bradley, MF: Currently on England's Aston Villa's roster but not seeing much playing time, Bradley could find a better fit internationally, perhaps in Germany, with a strong showing in the Gold Cup — something along the lines of his performance at the 2010 World Cup.

Juan Agudelo, F: U.S. Soccer maintains that it doesn't want to push the 18-year-old Agudelo too hard too soon, but his performances while wearing a national-team jersey haven't left the federation with much choice. After scoring goals against South Africa and Argentina in friendlies over the last eight months, Agudelo has made himself one of the top scoring options.

Tim Ream, D: The best-passing centerback on the U.S. roster, Ream is in just his second season as a professional but might have already claimed a spot in the starting lineup for years to come. He adds composure to the roster.

Freddy Adu, MF: Back on the national team for the first time in two years, the 21-year-old is set for a reserve role, but that doesn't mean he won't contribute. After regaining his moxie with a successful loan stint in Turkey over the last few months, Adu's ability to create for others could come in handy. A.C.

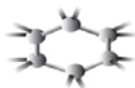

3 Wise Men: Opera great Placido Domingo, left, has been asked by FIFA President Sepp Blatter to join a new committee intended to help clean up world soccer's governing body. Blatter hopes the 70-year-old Spanish-born tenor will sit on a "council of wisdom" alongside former U.S. secretary of state Henry Kissinger and former Netherlands player Johan Cruyff. Domingo appeared with the three tenors at concerts before four-straight World Cups. (AP)

Guinea Pig | The Pitcher of Health

Besides ice cream and hot dogs, few things taste of summer as much as lemonade. The problem is, varieties such as Country Time contain so much sugar (a whopping 35 grams per 12-ounce can) and so many calories that it's hard to slurp them and fit into your bikini/bike shorts. Honest Ade's new Zero Calorie Classic Lemonade ($1.79 per bottle) gets its citrusy, tart punch from organic lemons and stevia — a leaf-based, calorie-free sweetener — meaning you can gulp it guilt-free.

With Nutritionix.com, diners at restaurants can see how their meal choices add up

Website

When your stomach is grumbling, there's no time to mess with math. Sure, you'll have the cheese on that. You'd love some extra sauce. And before you know it, you've unwittingly created a fattening monstrosity.

That's precisely the problem Daniel Zadoff and Matt Silverman hope to solve with their newly launched website, Nutritionix.com. It features nutrition calculators for the menus of several restaurants, so you can customize online rather than in line. As you add or subtract ingredients from your meal with a click of the mouse, you can watch a label — like the kind you'd find on the back of products at the grocery store — reflect the effects of your choices when it comes to calories, fat, sodium and protein.

Even though it's gotten easier to track down nutrition info from chains in recent years, deciphering spreadsheets of numbers and applying them to your specific choices is still tricky on the fly. "Let's say I get a sandwich without the mayo. I have no idea how many calories I've saved," says Zadoff. Was it worth the deprivation? Was there another ingredient that he should have skipped instead?

Silverman figured out how to answer these kinds of questions back in 2004, when he created Chipotlefan.com. The basic calculator, which was not affiliated with the burrito chain in any way, proved instantly popular with regular customers like him. Thousands continue to visit every day, and they've been clamoring for access to similar information for additional restaurants.

So when Silverman and his buddy Zadoff graduated from George Washington University in 2008, they set out to make a more advanced version of the concept. Nutritionix.com currently has 12 restaurant calculators, ranging from national chains such as

How It Works

Each calculator lets you build your meal based on the restaurant's menu.

So at Merzi, you first decide on your base, and that item's nutritional info appears on the label. As you add meat, top with whatever veggies strike your fancy and drizzle with a selection of sauces, the numbers adjust to reflect your choices.

An Act of Merzi

For restaurants, having this info available in such a digestible form isn't necessarily a good thing. But Qaiser Kazmi, who owns Merzi (415 7th St. NW; Merzi.com), has jumped at the chance to get on the site. He promotes his Indian-inspired cuisine as healthy, but people are often skeptical of his claims — probably because it's so "flavorful and bloody delicious," he suspects. Saying "it's filling but not overstuffing" isn't as convincing as running the numbers: A rice bowl loaded with toppings can easily come in at less than 500 calories. Transparency is key to Kazmi, who also plans to post calories on his menu boards in the coming weeks. "This is something I want to sell," he says. It's time to find out whether being good for you is good for business. v.h.

Subway and, of course, Chipotle, to local spots, including Sweetgreen. (Some pay for the privilege, but most of the restaurants on the site are ones that have released enough of their data to build the calculator.)

On it, you can fiddle with portions to figure out the bottom line when you order double meat or just eat half the fries. Then you can save the info, in case you're keeping a food log or want to remember what to pick next time. If you're so inclined, you can even share your choices with friends via Facebook and Twitter.

Nutritionix plans to offer a more robust version of the site in a few weeks that will add original content from a host of bloggers discussing nutrition, exercise and science.

The plan is to become a one-stop shop for anyone deciding where to dine and what to order based on their dietary needs. Zadoff said he hopes the site will eventually be able to offer information from just about every restaurant out there. "People want to know what they're eating," he says. "Why not be ahead of the curve?" VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

Out of the Loop But in Her Life

Q My wife has a history of depression and shutting out her family. She's gotten help, and we've had a healthy relationship for the five years we've been together. However, her family now wants to get back into her life, and they blame me for "isolating" her. Nothing could be farther from the truth. But I also don't know that I want to have a relationship with them, being that they are lobbing accusations at me. UNFAIRLY BLAMED

There's something missing here, and it's your wife's take on all of this. Is she the one reporting how her family feels? Or is she a silent witness as they lay it on you? Either way, she plays — or should be playing — an integral role. She has to figure out how she's going to balance her difficult history with her hopes for the future, and she also needs to establish how she'll serve as a bridge between you and her family. I hope she has good professional support.

This isn't your battle to fight alone, but with your wife's consent, you can also certainly try to make inroads with your in-laws. (I get your frustration, but isolating yourself is no way to deal with their accusations of isolation.)

No Cuddling in the Cubicles

Q I started seeing a guy I work with and agreed to keep things private since we didn't want it to affect our jobs. He has seemed to want to get more serious, and I've met his friends and sister. But at work he still wants to pretend that nothing is happening. He acts like a completely different person, talks like a single guy, etc. I feel like it's weird that he can just turn it on and off. TROUBLED

I can understand it's jarring to see the guy you feel you're getting serious with "talking like a single guy," when there's nothing you can do about it. (What exactly is he doing, though — gloating that he gets to control the remote?) But at the same time, you both agreed to keep things private while at work, and, presumably, there's no reason to change that yet — at least to him.

What seems to trouble you most, though, is that he's doing such a great acting job. I don't think that's an absolute sign that he's playing you, but it's worthy of discussion. Get more specific to him about what bothers you, rather than the blanket idea that you're not officially "out" as a couple. It could be he'll realize that he's overcompensating a bit and tone it down.

Complete the Circuit

Fuse Pilates founder Mariska Breland likes to refer to her new studio as “the playground,” but in circuit training class, don’t expect to swing from monkey bars. Instead, you’ll cozy up to a combo reformer/tower. “It looks like a modern-day despot’s torture device, but it’s fabulous,” promises Breland, who hopes to turn students on to the genius — and joy — of the apparatus.

Work It Out

What it is: Bored by teaching traditional Pilates, Breland started blending in exercise elements from dance, yoga, barre and her own brain. Then, she added tunes. And she asked students to pick three body parts to focus on each session. “It’s a much better class when it’s spontaneously created,” she says. With those tweaks, she created the Fuse method, which she’s popularized over the past six years by teaching it on mats across town.

Last week, she finally opened a five-story space of her own in a grand Victorian house just off of Dupont Circle. It boasts four studios and all of the equipment necessary to offer a wider range of Fuse formats, including Fuse Circuit. “It’s designed to work you,” Breland says. That’s because you’re quickly segueing between exercises on the reformer (a sliding bed-like device) and the tower (a vertical structure loaded with springs and bars).

Moves: One of the defining features of a Fuse class is that it’s never like one you’ve taken before. “You don’t know what’s coming next,” says 29-year-old Rose Zukin, who’s trained privately with Breland for years.

But you can bet that at some point you’ll be using your core to lift yourself so you’re resting on just your shoulders and feet — or more likely, a single foot. You’ll pulse your leg in and circle it. You’ll either grip a set of loops or stick Mariska Breland adjusts one of her students doing tower work. Take away the mats under her, and the tower becomes a reformer.

Class Facts

Take a look at Fuse’s schedule and you’re sure to be overwhelmed by the number of offerings. Here are a few of the other innovative options.

- ▶ Fuse Jump Interval. “You don’t get out without sweating,” Breland says of this cardio-focused class that involves bouncing off the bottom of the reformer.
- ▶ Push Prep. So many of Breland’s clients now have baby bumps that she’s created a prenatal version of the circuit class with moves approved for most moms-to-be.
- ▶ Stretch-Arazzi. Holding stretches for a long time is good for you. “But it hurts,” Breland admits. Hopefully, chatting about the latest in celebrity gossip will divert your attention.

your feet inside them to pull on straps that let you move back and forth. Be prepared to lie on a box so you’re practically falling off to perform back extensions, or to flip over and place your feet on a bar so you can do elevated push-ups.

Workout: “You’re really doing strength training. It’s a mat workout times 10,” says Leah Lemoine, 27, who took her first circuit class last week. Many of these exercises don’t seem tricky, though, until you feel the burn building with each rep — and you see the sweat puddles appearing beneath you. (Please clean those up after class.) Looking for even more of a challenge? By adjusting the springs attached to the apparatus, you can control the amount of resistance.

Expect to see plenty of spinning wheels if you head to Arlington this weekend.

Biking Fun for Everyone

Events

Gear up for a biking bonanza in Arlington this weekend.

The county will welcome the Air Force Cycling Classic (Airforcecyclingclassic.com), a two-day series of events that includes races for pros, amateurs and kids, as well as Crystal Ride, a noncompetitive option for the masses.

It’s also hosting the Washington Area Bicyclist Association’s (Waba.org) first Bike-Fest, which is a chance to celebrate cycling on two feet rather than two wheels. As part of the carnival-themed fundraiser, guests will be invited to toss items into baskets affixed to handlebars, knock over water bottles and participate in other games. That’s when they’re not noshing, drinking, dancing and marveling at the submissions in a crazy custom bike-building showcase.

Money raised at the events will go to worthy causes: the Air Force Aid Society (Afas.org) and the WABA, which recently launched an initiative to beef up bike programming and resources in Ward 8. v.h.

Crowd: Because Breland’s brand has built up a following, many students have taken classes with her (or instructors she’s trained in her method) before. But the new formats are requiring everyone to learn how to work the equipment together, which leads to instant camaraderie. Selecting the three body parts to target also promotes bonding. At a class on Friday, when someone yelled out “b-thigh,” referring to the area where your tush connects to the top of your leg, the room filled with giggles.

That’s important to Breland, who spends “an inordinate amount of time” obsessing over her playlists and is striving for a more relaxed vibe than you’d find at a typical Pilates studio. “We just want it to be fun,” she says. Smiles won’t make this stuff any less hard-core.

Practical Jokes Reach a Crowd

A comedic approach helps when explaining how to handle ADHD

Workshop

What's so funny about attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder? Not much, when you realize ADHD is responsible for breaking up marriages, destroying finances and causing car accidents.

So when Canadian comedian Rick Green (best known for co-creating "The Red Green Show," a sitcom that aired on PBS until 2006) approached ADHD specialist Umesh Jain about collaborating on a humorous documentary, the psychiatrist was dubious. "My first feeling was, 'What are you talking about? You're going to make fun of people with a mental disorder?'" he says.

But Green, who was diagnosed 10 years ago, persuaded Jain to take part in "ADD and Loving It?!", which was released in 2009. As Green predicted, the film drew in viewers who otherwise wouldn't have known much about the disorder and pushed people who suspected they had a problem to get help. "I've always believed that when you get people laughing, they can't be afraid," Green says.

Their project continues in the form of a cheeky website (Totallyadd.com) and a workshop that they'll be presenting along with comedian-actor Patrick McKenna — who also has ADHD — at the University of Maryland on Sunday.

"Suspect You Have Adult ADHD? Now What?!" has plenty of comedy bits, including a skit in which a father takes his son to the doctor for an ADHD screening and winds up answering all of the questions himself; and a radio play about a wife dealing with her husband's odd behavior.

The workshop is intended to be funny and instructive. So the presenters discuss strategies for managing money and improving organizational skills (two common sticking points for folks with ADHD). There's also advice on what to say to people who dismiss their actions as flightiness and laziness. Although ADHD is often misdiagnosed as anxiety or depression, it's "eminently treatable" when handled properly, Jain says.

Green can vouch for that. Knowing what he's up against has made it easier for him to face his problems. "I used to suffer from ADHD," he says. "And now I just have it."

Songs and Stories

In the last line of his new autobiography, "See a Little Light: " ($24.99, Little, Brown & Co.), legendary singer/guitarist Bob Mould says to his fans: "I am always humbled and honored to be a small part of your lives." It's a two-way street: I've been a fan for 26 years, mostly of his work with melodic punk band Hüsker Dü.

By Christopher Porter

I didn't really connect with Mould's poppier band, Sugar, but I was curious to read what inspired his huge catalog of songs, including his solo material. His story is the story of punk, from underground threat to mainstream success.

A nomad, Mould lived in the District from 2002 to 2009 and writes that our city's vibrant gay scene helped him find a community after spending most of his life out of the closet, but performing for mostly straight rock dudes. Mould lives in San Francisco now, but the Blowoff DJ dance parties he started here still feel like part of the District — just as Hüsker Dü will always be a part of me. Mould holds a performance and reading Friday at the Birchmere and spins Blowoff at the 9:30 Club Saturday.

ACROSS CULTURES: Ahmed Ahmed performs brings stand-up comedy to Cairo and Beirut in his film, "Just Like Us."

Boundary Breaker

Egyptian-American comic Ahmed Ahmed unites cultures with his film, 'Just Like Us'

Personalities

Stand-up comedians routinely talk about working tough crowds, but Ahmed Ahmed's toughest might have been an audience of one, at a Ramadan dinner he attended last fall at the State Department.

"Hillary Clinton comes in, and I get to meet her," Ahmed recalls. "And she sits down in the seat next to me. I was so shocked. 'So tell me about these comedy shows you do in the Middle East.' I told her. She said, 'You do it in English? And they get it?' 'Yeah,' I said, 'they get

Adjustments

Comedy Across Borders

Veteran comedian Tommy Davidson, left, who appears in "Just Like Us," says the adjustments American comedians make in the Middle East are based on common sense. "Talking about sex in a place like [Saudi Arabia, for example] is like walking into a lion cage with a hat made of pork chops," he says. "You can do it, but it's not a good idea." J.A.

it.' She said, 'I'd like to see it.' I said, 'Funny you should ask; I just happen to have a copy right here.'

Like any savvy first-time filmmaker, Ahmed had his movie in his pocket. "Just Like Us," (opening Friday) — a combination comedy revue, travelogue and geopolitical experiment — chronicles a stand-up tour of the Middle East by a troupe of ethnically diverse comedians working some of the tougher venues in the world. Dubai. Beirut. Cairo. Places where the boundaries of humor are dangerously unclear — where the usual sense of peril that accompanies live comedy is ratcheted up by location, religion and the tinderbox of Mideast politics, and where people laugh just like they do here.

Which is, of course, the point. Ahmed, who is Egyptian American, says the movie is really "about humor and family and culture."

In the end, Ahmed — who was once banned in Dubai for telling a joke that merely touched on religion — says he hopes to break down cultural barriers and educate audiences in the West, where the Mideast is often viewed as monolithic.

"One of the best moments of my life was after this Nashville screening," he says. "A 70-year-old Christian pastor came up to me and said, 'Hey, I just wanted to say I really loved the film; the message was loud and clear. If you could bleep out a couple of the f-bombs in your movie, I'd love to play it in my church.'"

JOHN ANDERSON (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Fresh Start: Katie Couric will enter the world of daytime talk in a post-Oprah Winfrey era, ABC announced Monday. ABC will produce the talk show, which will premiere in September 2012. In the interim, she'll work at ABC News anchoring specials and conducting interviews. Her new show doesn't have a name yet but will be based in New York. Eight ABC-owned stations have agreed to air the show in their 3 p.m. Eastern time slots, the network said. (AP)

1 Party Like It's 1879

The Smithsonian claims the Victorians knew how to party, but its Victorian-themed summer garden party features flower arranging, postcard-making and a cash bar. Don't invite Victorians to Cancun, y'all. But if you want to learn about old-time garden traditions, this is the place. Enid A. 2 Were You Raised Under A Bridge?

Some people believe that Danish culture has declined since the days of Beowulf, but we disagree. The Royal Danish Ballet is performing two pieces by its famous former ballet master, August Bournonville, including "A Folk Tale," which is about a girl brought up by TROLLS. See? Denmark is still undeniably awesome. Kennedy Center, 2700 F St. NW; through Sun., $29-$99; 202-467-4600, Kennedy-center.org. (Foggy Bottom)

3 Teenage Dream

Summer outdoor movie season is in full swing, and Columbia Heights will screen "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" — starring Matthew Broderick, pictured — tomorrow night. It is, when you think about it, a perfect summer flick for adults who wish they could play hooky now that summer vacation no longer exists. Sigh. Tubman Elementary Field, 13th and Kenyon streets NW; Wed., 8:30 p.m., free; Columbiaheightsday.org. (Columbia Heights)

THINKS THE ADDITION OF ALBERT, ABOVE, TO CBS' NFL BROADCASTS FOR NEXT SEASON IS A GOOD ONE.

"Remember, Fox News, she works for you. You pay her for commentary, and she should be treated with respect, as does everyone who works for you. She should be treated with respect regardless of that, but even more so because she works for you. And now you owe her an apology. Seriously."

Horoscope

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You're planning things out in a logical fashion, but you may be forgetting one important element. A friend or partner alerts you to your mistake.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) To make a last-minute adventure pay off, you're going to have to do a few things in advance that you wanted to save for later.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You may not fully grasp the meaning of certain seemingly trivial developments, but suffice it to say that nothing should be overlooked.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You know how to economize, but you will not be able to avoid certain expenditures — nor should you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You must remind yourself that things may not be quite the way they seem to you. Indeed, you are giving certain things too much weight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) What begins as a solitary exercise may soon become a group effort, but this is advantageous for you and everyone else involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) What you do must fit into the scheme of things as seamlessly as possible. You don't want to let a single wrinkle upset the works.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your knowledge of historical events can serve you well, as you try to make connections that affect your immediate future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You mustn't make the mistake of thinking that you are functioning in a vacuum; on the contrary, you are affected by much — and vice versa.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Don't let your imagination run away with you; stay practical, logical and by all means reasonable. You'll do plenty of listening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You and a friend may differ on a key point, but neither of you must let this issue halt overall progress.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) It's a good day to assess your efficiency — at work and at home. Remember that proper rest can contribute to progress and effectiveness.
